

Warning: This is not a toy.

Our treat for you this Halloween is that tricky red devil well-known for its paranormal fish-flops: the famous Fortune Telling Fish.

It will scribble augurs or omens on your open palm, twitch and shimmy by the heat of your aura — but beware: minor twists bode big tidings.

Trick and Treat

Halloween is a melting pot of spooky sixth-sense traditions: witches, ghosts, vampires, mummies (and superheroes). The night when the dead mingle with the living, Halloween is naturally big on fortune telling; after all, who better to explicate the mysteries of the universe than an ancient spirit steeped in the supernatural?

That's not a rhetorical question — we have an answer: the famous Fortune Telling Fish.

Future News

A stranger will come to Macktez from a faraway place, like France, or New Hampshire. He will speak the tongues of many lands and also know a thing or two about web development. He will join the Team.

The magic fish sees the letters R, e, e, and d in your future.

— The Team at Macktez

Mysteries of the Fish-Flops Revealed!

Undoubtedly, the marketers at Toymith Group have undersold their Taiwanese friend by presenting such a limited set of “fortunes” on the wrapper of this magical device. Luckily, just next door to the Mott Street curiosity shop where we procured these squirmy soothsayers, we met a bangled Gypsy who promised to unlock the full potential of your clairvoyant carp’s predictive power.

From a damp corner of her cobwebbed cellar, our neighborhood seer extracted an elaborate set of cards (printed with squid ink) that hold the ancient key to the timeless mysteries of piscine prognostication.